

I didn't really watch television until I got a TiVo. I'm pretty busy, and being forced to adhere to the broadcast schedule really makes it hard for me to view television. VCRs are too much of a pain to use.

With TiVo, I'm now a satellite television subscriber.

I do typically fast-forward through commercials, but since I pay the satellite people for t.v., and I pay the TiVo people for their service, and I've paid for all the equipment, it's inconceivable to me that the television producers really need me to watch commercials as well in order to make money.

If the ability to skip commercials and time-shift content so that it suits my needs and schedule goes away, no problem. I'll just cancel my satellite subscription and TiVo account, and stop watching T.V.

Thanks,

Mike Higgins
